WINERY PROFILES

An in-depth look at Italy's best wineries here today, serving JamesSuckling.com's favorite wines.

Editor's

The Great Wines of Italy series not only identify the most outstanding and unique wines that Italy offers today but also bring the top producers behind the scenes to the forefront. At our events, you get to savor momentous wines with vineyard owners, passionate winemakers and representatives of the best wineries in Italy.

This edition of Great Wines of Italy USA takes center stage in four major cities in United States – New York, Miami, Beverly Hills and San Francisco – bringing you an evocative array of Italian wines that all received scores of 90 points and above. In preparation for this premium Italian wine tasting event, my team of top tasters and I visited many wine regions in Italy, and tasted and rated more than 3,500 wines in total last year. And today, we're pleased to have handpicked and gathered more than 175 prestigious Italian producers for the event and showcase a wealth of local wines being produced throughout Italy.

With the brand-new year 2018 ahead of us, we are excited to announce that we will be expanding wine coverage to new territories; to name a few: South Africa and parts of United States such as Arizona, Washington State and Pennsylvania. While we are digging deeper into both lesser-known and famed wine regions, we are also tasting more as a team – which consists of Stuart Pigott, Nick Stock, my son Jack Suckling and myself – to bring you more unified and comprehensive tasting notes and wine scores. And we are more than thrilled to share them with you via our reports and stories, as well as the numerous tasting tours and events we have in store for 2018 in the United States and Asia.

And of course, we will continue to contribute to Sea Shepherd Conservation Society (SSCS), an international non-profit, marine wildlife conservation organization. Aside from safeguarding the biodiversity of our ocean ecosystems, we also support the many great organic and biodynamic wine producers in Italy. Without being mindful of the environment, the world of wine will most certainly suffer. For the future of wine, let's all share the responsibilities and protect Mother Nature's precious resources.

While all of our events are 100% independent and organized by my team at James-Suckling.com, there are still wonderful sponsors that we would like to thank. As ever, warmest thanks must go to the renowned French glassmaker Lalique as they provide the tasting glasses here. Beautiful and functional, these special glasses are specifically crafted for JamesSuckling.com events, mirroring the design of my 100 Points wine glass collection.

In a world driven by mass culture and uniform tastes, these well-respected Italian producers have stayed true to unique local traditions, as well as capitalizing the best in viticulture and winemaking. We are pleased to present such storied sips here tonight. Enjoy all the vino!

TOP 100 Italian Wines OF 2017

This year's Top 100 Italian Wines of 2017 focuses on pure quality. We tasted so many great bottles of Italian wine in 2017 and rated more than 3,500 in total; so, it was difficult to narrow it down to just 100 wines.

Tuscany was the leader of great wines from Italy in our tastings as its momentous wines from the 2015 vintage come onto the market after a weak 2014. Don't miss buying 2015 Tuscany. So many excellent wines are out there and more will be released next year.

That's why our Italian Wine of the Year 2017 is the Tua Rita Redigaffi 2015, the pure merlot wonder from the Tuscan coast near the city of Grosseto. It was the only wine we rated 100 points this year from Italy, and it is a benchmark wine for its intensity, structure, pedigree and balance. In fact, we featured six Tuscan wines in our top 10 in the list to underline the region's leadership in ultra-premium Italian wines.

At the same time, 2013 is a beautiful vintage for Barolo and we included many great bottles in the Top 100 Italian Wines of 2017. None were better than the Aldo Conterno Barolo Cicala 2013, a long-time favorite in single-vineyard Barolos and a gorgeous 2013. Conterno is the master of this unique plot of land in the Bussia area of the region, and the latest release is perhaps the greatest Cicala ever with such power and harmony.

When it also comes to Barolo, we hope many of you are as excited as we are about the increase in well-aged, recently released bottles, particularly the 10-year-old ones. Consider the Damilano Barolo Cannubi Reserva 2009, for instance, which just reached the market now. We put it as our No. 8 Italian wine this year. It's a special selection from the Damilano family's large holdings of this very special vineyard and aged longer in reserved casks before bottling than normal bottles. What an amazing Barolo by all accounts! Indeed, a handful of other "super Riserva" bottles are in our list including: Gianni Gagliardo Barolo Serre 10 Anni 2007, Marchesi di Barolo Barolo Sarmassa 10 Anni 2007.

We can't remember a Top 100 Italian Wines list from JamesSuckling.com with so many excellent white wines, which we hope will encourage more people to take Italian whites seriously. Great whites seem to be emerging from all over Italy from classic regions such as Soave and Campania to tiny islands off the Tuscan coast. The latter give us great pleasure to commend as we always enjoy visiting the islands of Gorgona and Giglio on the Tuscany coast and believe these unique terroirs are making some of the most exciting whites in Italy now. Gorgona is more than just a special place and a great wine — it is a bottle with a social purpose where winemaking is helping a penal colony rehabilitate into society.

Campania is another unique place in Italy that we are more and more excited about. I still have memories of early in my career visiting the volcanic region and marveling in the quality of ancient bottles of Taurasi from the 1950s. Although Montevetrano Colli di Salerno 2015, the No. 9 wine in the list, is only partially aglianico, it illustrates the pedigree and balance the grape can achieve in the right winemaker's hands.

We really are fans of volcano wines, which is why the list had to include a few Etna reds. The wines are still growing in popularity in the international marketplace, and this hasn't come without strides in quality. The appellation of Etna offers distinctive characteristics and harmony in both reds and whites — all from the slopes of a formidable live volcano in Sicily.

This year's JamesSuckling.com Top 100 Italian Wines is an inspiration to me after almost four decades as a wine critic. There are so many great wines out there. My team and I promise to taste even more Italian wines in 2018 to bring you the most comprehensive ratings of Italian wines in international wine criticism. Until next year, enjoy our 2017 list and don't forget to search for other great Italian wines released this year and in the past!

T O P 100 WINES OF 2017

This year, we tasted close to 17,000 wines. JamesSuckling.com tasters, including myself, Stuart Pigott, Nick Stock and my son Jack, tasted wines in just about every major winegrowing country, and most of the tasting was in the given region of production. This gave us an insight into more than the liquid in the bottle. It provided us with an understanding and feel of this year's releases whether from Tuscany, the Barossa Valley, Rioja, Napa Valley, the Mosel, the Wachau and dozens of other places. We talked to winemakers, walked the vineyards and smelled the land.

It wasn't done for the frequent flyer miles! We traveled like that in 2017 because we are all curious at JamesSuckling.com what the best wines out there are at the moment — we want to taste and report about them. We love wine, and that's the bottom line.

After 36 years as a wine critic, this was one of the most exciting. We tasted so many amazing wines and had so many wonderful experiences. And we shared it all as a team, a family and for readers, meaning you. It makes it all the more difficult to create a list of the 100 best wines in 2017. And it's even harder to come up with the JamesSuckling.com Wine of the Year 2017.

But we decided on one wine in the end: the 100-point Almaviva Puente Alto 2015 from Chile. This is a wine that epitomizes greatness with its intensity, structure and balance. It underlines the movement away from overdone, jammy wines to a neoclassicism with energy and finesse. It also highlights how South America, specifically Chile, has come into its own as a wine area, producing superb wines that can compete with the best in the world. The other two Chilean wines in our top 10 are Seña Valle de Aconcagua 2015 and Clos Apalta Apalta 2014. They are both perfect wines.

There's also an Argentine wine in the group: Catena Zapata Chardonnay Mendoza Adrianna Vineyards White Stones 2014. Among the top 10 in the list are also a consistently great merlot from Tuscany, Petrolo Toscana Galatrona 2015; a super cab from Australia's Margaret River, Vasse Felix Cabernet Sauvignon Margaret River Tom Cullity 2013; a spicy riesling from Austria's Wachau, F.X. Pichler Riesling Wachau Ried Kellerberg Smaragd 2016; a crazy quality pinot noir from California's Sonoma Coast, Littorai Pinot Noir Sonoma County Sonoma Valley Sonoma Coast The Haven Vineyard 2015; an amazing Super Tuscan, Fattoria Le Pupille Maremma Toscana Saffredi 2015; and a great Bordeaux, Ducru-Beaucaillou 2014.

This year's JamesSuckling.com Top 100 Wines of the Year is our most comprehensive list ever. All the wines were picked by score, availability (more than 300 cases made) and combination of excitement and price. There are so many great wines in the list. We hope you enjoy it, and we look forward to tasting and finding even more great wines in 2018.

ABBAZIA DI NOVACELLA

Founded in 1142, Abbazia di Novacella is a historic estate that makes quality wine in the Alto Adige region. Here, the white varieties, such as kerner and sylvaner, are grown in predominantly granitic schist soils which are formed by ancient glaciers. As the vineyards are well-elevated – 800 meters above sea level – the wines are imbued with finesse and elegance. Aside from white varietals, the winery also produces pinot nero, lagrein and schiava. These grapes are grown further south at the Marklhof estate, which overlooks the town of Bolzano. The characteristics of the region, as well as the microclimate of the vineyard, are all beautifully conveyed in their red wines.

Founded in 1972, Altesino is one of the benchmarks of single-vineyard Brunello di Montalcino. They stand in contrast to most Brunellos, which are blends of grapes from different vineyards scattered across the small region. With its single-vineyard wonder Montosoli being one of the leading wines of the region year in and year out, the family-owned estate Altesino makes exceptionally balanced and structured Brunellos. The Brunellos of Altesino have been getting better and better since Elisabetta Gnudi Angelini purchased the estate in 2002. While some of the greatest vintages of Montosoli include the 1997 and 2001, the 2007 still remains as one of our favorites.

One of Tuscany's most accomplished consulting enologists Paolo Vagaggini and his wife Bernardetta Angela Tacconi Vagaggini started this estate a few years ago, and the wines continue to impress us. The couple made it their mission to produce original, superior wines at Amantis, which is located in the crossroads territory of Montenero, near Montalcino in the Montecucco area. Sangiovese, present in a variety of clones, is the most important variety in the Amantis project. Amantis is blessed with balanced clay soils and favorably hilly topography. The vineyards are high density with approximately 8,000 plants per hectare. This helps assure tiny crops that deliver concentrated wines.

When the names Rosalba Vitanza and Guido Andretta are brought up, their story of serious winemaking comes to mind. The couple's Brunello di Montalcino winery came into the limelight with an excellent 1997, which became the benchmark vintage for the region. And the two continued to make excellent, exciting Brunellos ever since. So far, a number of these outstanding Brunellos have been rated 90+ points. It's also interesting to note that the brands – Andretta and Vitanza – are now under the ownership of GP Imports, LLC.; and this move has allowed the team to develop their brand in other parts of the world such as Napa Valley.

Located in the famous Bolgheri district on Tuscany's coastline, the Tenuta Argentiera is surrounded by some of Italy's most famous wineries: Guado al Tasso, Ornellaia and Tenuta San Guido. Back in Etruscan times, the plateau of the tenuta was rich in canals and natural springs as well as the silver mines that give the estate its name. The tenuta is now owned by Stanislaus Turnauer and the Fratini brothers, Corrado and Marcello. The prime location is complemented by a world-class team led by vineyard manager Federico Zileri and the famous Bordeaux consulting oenologist Stéphane Derenoncourt, who produce wines that always have a harmonious, soulful nature.

This beautiful estate in the southern part of the appellation of Brunello di Montalcino has long been a leader in the region. First, it made long-aging Brunellos with richness and depth, and then went on to producing superb Super Tuscan reds such as the Solengo blend. All the reds of recent vintages show impressive balance and finesse with structure. The property was recently sold to a group of Brazilian investors, who are determined to take Argiano to the next level in wine quality. They are already achieving their goal as their wines routinely receive outstanding scores from us.

The Barberani brothers, Bernardo and Niccolò, craft some of the most compelling wines in Umbria. Founded in 1961 by their grandfather, The Barberani estate is located on in the hills in Orvieto, overlooking Lake Corbara. The estate owns more than 100 hectares in total, where 55 hectares are covered by specialized vineyards enhanced by the unique microclimate of the nearby lake. Here, everything is done by hand and as of 2015, all of the wines are certified as organic. The winery also works with a host of varietals, producing delectable whites. Their reds are also impressive, showing nice tannins and focused acidity.

Located in the historic town Erice in Trapani of Sicily, Barone di Serramarrocco is a wine estate occupying approximately 60 hectares of land, where 22 hectares are dedicated to high-density vineyards. Here, the grape-growing area are at an altitude of 380 feet above sea level, and the soils are primarily composed of calcareous clayey silt, gravel and stones. Utilizing the natural soil composition and microclimate of the region to its advantage, Serramarrocco grows an array of grape varietals such as pignatello, nero d'avola, cabernet franc, cabernet sauvignon, zibibbo and grillo.

The name Ricasoli has been associated with the versatile red of Tuscan Chianti since the 1870s. In recent years, the winery has come through once again as one of the leaders of Chianti Classico. What makes all of this so amazing is that the owner Francesco Ricasoli manages to produce very good to excellent wines across the board, from simple Chiantis to powerful, structured Chianti Classico Gran Seleziones. As one of the largest wineries in the region of Chianti Classico, Barone Ricasoli also produce wonderful Bordeaux blends such as the Super Tuscan Casalferro.

The Moretti family began making sparkling wines in northern Italy's Franciacorta region in the late 1970s. It didn't take long for the family winery Bellavista to become one of the best producers in Italy, and some even proclaim their sparkling wines to be the country's best. The quality of Bellavista's wines rivals some of the best names in Champagne. With the recent acquisition of new vineyards, Bellavista now comprises a total of 198 hectares. The vast underground cellars – all filled with row upon row of aging bottles – clearly illustrates Moretti's dedication in making sparkling wines imbued with exquisite character and richness.

The storied vineyards of the Bellini family are located in the Chianti Rufina region. From a family of landowners, Carlo Bellini expanded the business back in the 1950s. Today, his daughters, Letizia and Alessandra Bellini, and his nephew, Maurizio Masi, are all helping out at the family-owned wine estate. Here, they cultivate a selection of local and international grape varietals such as sangiovese, cabernet franc, merlot and syrah. Given that the soils are sandy and limestone-rich, the terrain here is most ideal for the growth of sangiovese. Hence, the wines boast good acidity and elegant tannins.

Giuseppe Bersano founded this winery in 1907 in the Asti region of Piedmont. Now, it has become the largest privately held winery in the region, with no less than 10 estates and more than 230 hectares under its control. Guiseppe's son, Arturo, was responsible for building up a large chunk of the estate in the 1950s and 1960s. In 1985, the Massimelli and Soave families purchased Bersano and began making refined and flavorful wines. By the 1990s and early 2000s, the winery was known for its good quality commercial wines. More recently, it has made huge strides in producing premium wines. This is a producer to watch.

In the stretch of little more than a decade, Bibi Graetz has become one of the brightest lights in Tuscan winemaking. This is primarily thanks to the superb quality of his pure sangiovese Testamatta. Graetz is crazy for old vines, which give his best reds depth and soul. He makes his top red wines on the hillsides above Florence, which is close to the village of Fiesole, and sources grapes from top sites in Chianti Classico such as Montefili and Lamole. His whites from the island of Giglio are also an inspiration and quickly proving that Tuscany can make great whites as well as reds.

With a deep dedication to quality, the Swiss Widmer family founded this estate in the early 1980s. Brancaia's well-regarded Chianti Classico and accompanying Riserva have always enjoyed a following. However, more recently, Brancaia has garnered even more kudos through winemaker Barbara Widmer's Super Tuscans. To name a few of the estate's top labels; II Blu and Ilatraia are both wonderful sips. The former is a soft yet powerful blend of mainly sangiovese and merlot farmed in the commune of Radda in Chianti, while the latter is a Bordeaux blend produced from the family's holdings further south in the Maremma region.

Bruno Giacosa, one of the legends of Barolo, passed away in Piedmont at the age of 88 earlier this year in January. Giacosa was a mentor to James, and we will always remember his sharp wit and precise palate. In his early years, he was said to have the ability to taste grapes from particular vineyards and be able to name them on the spot. Now, his daughter Bruna will take over and continue to produce amazing red wines. The wine estate has always consistently produced wines with impeccable depth and finesse. James sometimes likens their incredible Barolos and Barbarescos to the reds of Domaine de la Romanee-Conti.

Cafaggio has been a name in Tuscany since the 15th century, when records show the Benedictine monks of Siena took care of the property. Located near the town of Panzano, the vineyard covers about 60 hectares in the "Conca d'Oro" (or golden basin) of Chianti Classico, which is arguably the finest area in the appellation. While excellent Super Tuscans are produced, the focus is very much on Chianti Classico here. The significance is that, it allows Cafaggio to produce a wide range of Chianti Classicos and single-vineyard bottlings. It's also interesting that all the wines share the same age-worthy, structured style.

The businessman also owns Bordeaux's Château Giscours and Château du Tertre. The top wine of Caiarossa is a fascinating blend of sangiovese, cabernet franc, merlot, cabernet sauvignon, alicante, petit verdot and mourvedre. Castello di Camilgiano was acquired in 1957 by the Ghezzi family, and the current proprietor Gualtiero Ghezzi has put a great deal of energy into modernizing the company. Today, Camilgiano occupies 530 hectares, where 90 of which are under vine. Gualtiero has also recently planted new Brunello vineyards and built a new wine cellar underground. However, having said that, the production here reaches a few hundred thousand bottles as a thorough selection of grapes takes place. Hence, the yield per hectare are kept painstakingly low; and that often means they're producing high quality wines at a reasonable price.

The Brunellos di Montalcino of this family-owned estate are almost always extremely aromatic and bright. This is partly due to the location of the vineyards, which is situated on the northern slopes of the appellation. The estate dates back to the early 1960s, when Primo Pacenti started the property. His grandchildren are now managing the vineyards and winery. Although we've been tasting their Brunellos of Canalicchio di Sopra since the mid-1980s, we believe that some of the best vintages are only recently being produced. For instance, the 2010s are among the estate's best Brunellos, which are definitely worth seeking out.

A dynamic estate in Castagnoli, Cantalici might be one of the youngest wineries that we feature. The Cantalici brothers, Carlo and Daniele, were working in the forest industry up until 1995, when they decided to pivot to wine. Caparzo is one of the few estate-bottled producers of Brunello di Montalcino to have its own holdings on all five sides of the hill of Montalcino. This helps ensure that no climatic challenges can affect production as one of the five vineyards can surely compensate. Owner Elisabetta Gnudi Angelini aims to make top-quality wines by using traditional techniques, as well as applying a modern outlook. Caparzo wines have always been marked by a noble intensity and freshness. The top Caparzo Brunello is probably La Casa, which is made from a single vineyard on the hill of Montosoli as it is a denser, racier Brunello than the others.

Wine jars and tasting cups were found in Etruscan tombs dating to approximately 1000 BC, and this shows that vines have been cultivated in Carmignano since pre-Roman times. The last two generations of the Contini Bonacossi family, however, are responsible for making the winery famous for beautifully crafted reds at all price points. We first visited the estate in 1983 and have been impressed with Capezzana's wines ever since – especially when it comes to top Carmignanos. Casa Raia rests on the promontory by the Fortress of Montalcino in Tuscany, at approximately 365 meters above sea level. Here, the cultivation is all done by hand, from handpicking the grapes to cleaning each of the bundles thoroughly during maturation and harvesting times. Located on sloppy hills of this rocky terrain, the soils are composed of eroded local rocks such as marl and dendrite. Thus, some of the luscious wines here boast intense aromas of spices.

Located near the ancient city of Satricum in the Agro Pontino Valley, Casale del Giglio was founded by Dino Santarelli in 1967 at Le Ferriere. The success of Casale del Giglio was spurred by the vision of Dino Santarelli, and now, his son Antonio has taken over as the owner. Not traditionally known for wines, the area provided a blank canvas for the winery to match with the top international varieties and optimal terroirs. The full-bodied Mater Matuta is the flagship red here, and it shows the region's prowess with syrah. Whereas, the petit manseng is almost certainly the best dry example of the varietal in Italy.

The Casaloste wine estate is one of the few Chianti Classico producers that have come to the forefront of quality in the past 10 years. Located near the town of Panzano, almost all of the 10 hectares of vineyards are organically cultivated. At Casaloste, the owner and winemaker Giovanni D'Orsi crafts long, refined reds with wonderful depth of fruit and racy structure. For instance, D'Orsi makes these two pure riserva Chianti Classicos, which are now among our favorites from the appellation: the normal bottling and the Don Vincenzo. The latter is a selection of the best sangiovese on the property. However, the standard Chianti Classico is also sublime.

Cortonesi occupies 56 hectares of land, where roughly eight hectares are reserved for Brunello di Montalcino. The estate was formerly known as La Mannella, and it was renamed to "Cortonesi" to put emphasis on their family history and connection to Montalcino. The family also possess a smaller site named Poggiarelli in the southeast area, and they decided to start bottling two crus: La Mannella and Poggiarelli. We are very happy with this decision, as the Poggiarelli 2012 is one of the estate's best offering. Lovers of dark-fruited, chewy Brunellos will delight in these sumptuous wines.

Two of the most dynamic vintners in Italy, Diego and Alberto Cusumano are the heads of this famous name in Sicilian winemaking. They are able to produce excellent-quality wines from unique vine-growing regions at impressively reasonable prices. Here, they make wines with local, as well as international varieties; regardless if they are nero d'avola or chardonnay. We are a fan of their blends like the Cusumano Sicilia Tenuta Presti e Pegni Noà 2013. It would be a mistake to pass up their new white from the volcanic growing region of Etna. Cusumano continues to wave the flag of Sicilian winemaking around the world.

Since 1934, when Augusto Dal Cero purchased land in the commune of Roncà, the Dal Cero family has been making wine for over three generations. With meticulous care and tremendous passion, the Dal Cero family goes out of their way to ensure balanced soils, healthy grapes and, of course, high-quality wines. It's also interesting to note that, with the two volcanoes nearby, the soils are richly composed of lava and tuff. Here, they make a great selection of wines, from crisp, light-bodied whites to dark Amarones with ripe and round tannins.

Owned and managed by Matriarch Elena Walch and her daughters Julia and Karoline, the brand exploits some of Alto Adige's best vineyards to its fullest potential. Among all the lovely reds and vibrant whites, the blended chardonnay named Beyond the Clouds is undoubtedly the best. Like in many other leading northern Italian whites, an acidic international grape varietal is kept in line by less-green indigenous varietals. Resulting in a fabulously rich and complex white wine. Relying primarily on international grape types, the nobleman – who is also the president of Anonima Petroli Italiana – makes balanced wines with structure and richness akin to top reds and whites from Tuscany. Working with top consulting enologist Carlo Ferrini, Peretti now produces some of the best wines in the region. The creation of Vintage Tunina in 1977 by a young Anton Jermann at the age of just 21 was a historic moment for Italian whites. Few had taken these wines seriously until Jermann came onto the scene. The blend, which is now known to be sauvignon blanc, chardonnay, ribolla gialla, malvasia and picolit, actually started off as a trade secret. During the 1970s, alongside with a group of wineries in Friuli, Jermann eschewed the oak fermentation and aging, and favored the cutting-edge use of stainless steel vats. He also experimented with the blending of local and international varietals. The mineral, structured whites produced here cannot be replicated anywhere else.

Today, Fattoria La Castellina belongs to the Bojola-Targioni family, and it is managed by Tommaso Bojola and his wife Monica Targioni. Located in Chianti, the wine estate has 140 hectares of land under its control, and its grape growing lands focus on sangiovese predominantly. With lovely balance and finesse, their selection of Chianti Classicos are not to be missed. Aside from Chianti Classicos, La Castellina also makes pure merlot and Tuscany whites such as rosato toscana.

It all started in 1983 when Mauro Pacini purchased and renovated La Lecciaia. Located in Montalcino, this modern winery occupies 60 hectares of land, where only 16 of them are dedicated to vineyards. Here, most of the lush vineyards are planted with sangiovese. And thereby, the winery produces exquisite Brunellos di Montalcino of stunning depth and complexity. Although La Leccaia is a relatively young winery compared to many in Montalcino, it produces more traditional style Brunellos. With finesse and seduction, its reds are both dense and polished.

He is outspoken about his dedication to high quality, and a few years ago, he stopped using the Chianti Classico designation on the label of his top wine Giorgio Primo. The wine now uses no sangiovese and focuses on Bordeaux varietals. It is one of the strictest but most voluptuous reds from the Chianti Classico region. Lamborghini may be better known as the famous Italian brand of luxury supercars, but the automobile company's founder, avid inventor Ferruccio Lamborghini, delighted just as much in his passion for fine wine. In the late '60s, he settled on a picturesque setting in the Umbrian hills for the site of his winery, which overlooks the Lago di Trasimeno not far from the border with Tuscany. Ferruccio died in 1993, but his daughter, Patrizia, steered the estate to its heyday in the late '90s. The estate has just passed to new ownership, and the current wines, particularly the merlot/sangiovese Campoleone, are not far off in quality.

Mauro Molino is one of the few top Barolo makers who came to the forefront of the region in the 1980s by producing cleaner, more precise wines. He did so after having inherited vineyards from his father Giuseppe. Mauro's quest in fine winemaking continues today, with the help of his son and daughter, Matteo and Martina. Since 1979, Podere La Cappella has always belonged to the Rossini family. A native of Veneto, Bruno Rossini integrated the vineyards with the crops of olives and cultivation of fruit trees like apple and pear. Although the vineyards existed, Rossini was only selling the grapes at the beginning. However, he couldn't resist the temptation to express his own passion for wines in 1995. Podere La Cappella then started producing its own wine such as Chianti Classico and Corbezzolo. In the following year, the company gave birth to Cantico and started its expansion. Now, the wine estate makes rich and powerful wines like the Chianti Classico Riserva with 2011 vintage.

Established in 1999, Podere Sapaio is a relatively new estate located in the legendary coastal region of Bolgheri. It quickly made a name for itself for producing modern, fruit-forward yet structured reds. The Bordeaux blend, a Bolgheri Superiore carrying the name of the estate, is always extremely full and rich, with structure and focus maintained. We remember tasting the first vintage, 2004, with one of Italy's most famous winemakers. We were both blown away by the quality and pleasantly surprised by its relative value. The wines from Sapaio continue to be outstanding each year.

Poderi Aldo Conterno is one of the most impressive wine estates in all of Italy. From its great vineyards in Barolo, the winery makes some of the most exquisite red wines. It was all part of the dream of the late Aldo Conterno, who passed away in the spring of 2012. However, Poderi Aldo Conterno remains in the family and under the helm of Aldo's sons: Franco, Stefano and Giacomo. Conterno's three Barolo vineyards are all in Bussia and each has its own unique style. Recently, Colonnello has been showing incredibly well, but we have a soft spot for the Cicala, which always has an attractive freshness and firmness.

No expense has been spared by father and son Paolo and Giovanni Bulgari — the same family that owned the luxury jewelry and watch brand of the same name — to make great wine at Podernuovo a Palazzone. This Tuscan estate is located on the border with Lazio and Umbria. Giovanni oversees the entire operation, as well as the 26-hectare estate. Most of the wines are made with sangiovese, but montepulciano, cabernet sauvignon, cabernet franc and merlot are also grown. The last vintage of the cabernet franc sensation, Argirio, is outstanding and reminiscent of a premier cru St.-Emilion in style and structure.

As one of the best producers of the Veneto's Amarone, Marilisa Allegrini created this Bolgheri wine estate back in 2001. She built a new winery and planted vineyards, and today, Poggio al Tesoro is a 70-hectare estate in this prime winemaking territory. The vineyards located in an extraordinary terrain, where the amalgamated soils give the wines here that alluring complexity. Currently, she is producing some exciting, vibrant reds. We remember tasting one of Poggio Antico's first vintages (1985) and being impressed with the depth of fruit and sublime finish. We tasted it again recently and it was still beautiful. With strength and elegance, it is a benchmark of Poggio Antico. The producer makes two main Brunellos in addition to the Riserva: the regular bottling and the Altero. The two are aged slightly differently, the latter spending about two years in 500-liter French oak instead of Slavonian casks. We enjoy both styles.

You may know that Monte dei Paschi di Siena is the oldest surviving bank in the world, but you may not be aware that it also owns a number of top-notch wine estates. Poggio Bonelli, located near the town of Castelnuovo Berardenga, passed through a number of families including the Piccolominis, before being picked up by the Italian financial group in the early 2000s. The landholdings extend well over 800 hectares, covering both Chianti Classico and Chianti Colli Senesi, though only 88 are dedicated to vine-growing. Tony Sasa not only owns one of Florence's finewine destinations with his wine shop Enoteca Pontevecchio but also he produces an array of wines, including a wonderful Brunello di Montalcino called Puro and Martina. We tasted all their wines for the past three vintages, and each of them show wonderful balance. The 2009 is probably one of the best Brunellos of the vintage. Tony began making Brunello in the early 2000s after leasing a few acres of vineyards in the southern part of the appellation a few years before. He makes the wine with esteemed consulting enologist Paolo Caciorgna, who is a keen proponent of biodynamically grown grapes.

The Tornatore Family is one of the largest landholders in Etna, overseeing 46 hectares of vineyards on the northern slopes of the highest active volcano in Europe. Hence, the soils are of volcanic origin, imbuing the grape vines – Nerello Mascalese, Carricante and Catarratto – tremendous character. The family's history with Sicily dates back to 1865, long before the region became fashionable amongst global drinkers. And now, starting in 1910 with Giuseppe Tornatore overlooking the wine estate, Tornatore grew its holdings significantly. The Tornatore Etna Rosso Trimarchisa 2015 is probably the best yet. Not to be outdone is their Pietrarizzo. Seek them out if you haven't already.

The coastal winery Tua Rita built its global reputation on a fabulously rich merlot called Redigaffi, which stole the limelight in the Tuscan wine scene in the early 1990s. Within just a few years, many top wine collectors were looking for the wine all over the world and paying top dollar. The 1997 Redigaffi landed 100-point scores across the board, as well as from JamesSuckling.com. The 2015 Redigaffi is another 100 pointer and was the Italian Wine of the Year in 2017! Stefano Frascolla, who runs the estate with his wife and parents-in-law, has an incredible dedication to quality and is always striving to make the best wine possible in every vintage across the entire range. Bravo!

The qualitative evolution in the winemaking at Uccelliera is an excellent example of how small wine producers have better focused their viticulture and winemaking in the last decades. The wines here have always reflected the true nature of the vintage as well as Uccelliera's unique growing area in Montalcino. The Brunellos of Uccelliera first came onto the international market in the 1990s, however, the wines really came into their own after the owner Andrea Cortonesi revamped the vineyards. He also started making another small production Brunello called Voliero in 2006, which is produced from grapes in Sant'Angelo in Colle and Castelnuovo dell'Abate area of Montalcino.

Italy's Marche wine region is dominated by the great producer Umani Ronchi. With a total surface area of 210 hectares all under vine, the family-owned winery has given prestige to often-overlooked appellations such as Verdicchio dei Castelli and Conero. At the same time, Umani Ronchi has developed some fascinating Super Marche wines that are comparable to Super Tuscans. For example, Pelago is a blend of 50 percent cabernet sauvignon, 40 percent montepulciano and 10 percent merlot. The wine shows the unique character of the region in an international style.

There is something almost mystical about the Brunellos di Montalcino from the wonderful estate of Valdicava. The mystique must emanate from the sublime vineyards on the north side of Montalcino, which produce arguably the most exquisite grapes. And of course, the guru-like dedication of the owner Vincenzo Abbruzzese has also contributed to the craft of these lovely Tuscan sangiovese. Abbruzz ese makes a regular Brunello bottling, as well as a single-vineyard riserva called Madonna del Piano. So far, as of 2018, we've scored three of the wines here – the 2001, 2006 and 2010 Madonnas – all 100 points.

Located in Panzano, a village in the heart of Chianti Classico, Vecchie Terre di Montefilii was founded in 1979. Like so many great estates in the old world, Vecchie Terre di Montefili shares much of its history with monks. The Badia a Passignano abbey managed this Tuscan estate from the 12th century until the 1970s, when Roccaldo Acuti acquired the property and turned it into this top winery in Chianti. As expected, the vineyards here primarily focuses on sangiovese. In addition, Vecchie Terre di Montefilii also has a few rows of cabernet sauvignon, gewurztraminer and sauvignon blanc.

The whites of Vie de Romans are some of the best of Italy. In fact, they have the weight and complexity of some of the best whites in the world like white Burgundy and white, dry Bordeaux. This is all thanks to the owner Gianfranco Gallo, always making the most out of his vines in Friuli, as well as crafting his wines to near perfection. Unlike most weak pinot grigios sold in the world, Gallo's pinot grigio named Dessimis shows breathtaking intensity and texture. Here, the chardonnay Ciampagnis Vieris is layered and rich like a top Meursault. And the sauvignon blanc here beats many Pouilly Furnes.

Winemaking at Vignamaggio in Greve in Chianti dates back to the 14th century. However, it was Gianni Nunziante who bought the estate in 1988 and poured enormous passion into restoring its luster as a top wine producer. Now, Vignamaggio is managed by Patrice Taravella. The winery is still going strong, particularly with its wonderful, intense cabernet francs and distinguished Chianti Riservas, including the majestic and full Riserva di Monna Lisa (now a Gran Selezione). Underlining its seriousness, the estate has been a long-time supplier of wines to the Italian Senate and President's residence.

About one kilometer from Chianti Classico Radda in Chianti, Vignavecchia occupies 42 hectares of land, where 19 hectares are dedicated to grape growing. Here, the vineyards grow on classic soils of the area which is a mixture of clay schist and limestone. At an altitude around 410 and 500 meters above sea level, the vineyards are planted 70 percent sangiovese, as well as other grape varietals such as, canaiolo, merlot, malvasia and chardonnay. The Vignavecchia wines here show well-balanced acidity with fruit and a great aging potential. Don't miss the Chianti Classico 2015 which shows an alluring brightness and tension.

Driven by pure passion for wine, Massimo Losappio, former chief surgeon at Montalcino Hospital and his wife Marialuce purchased Villa Le Prata in 1980. The villa was built back in in 1860, however, it is really only now, after Losappio has taken over, the wine estate is producing fine wines. Faithful to traditions of Montalcino, Losappio makes a selection of Brunello di Montalcinos that we really enjoy. Lively and elegant, the Brunello di Montalcinos here tend to boast a fine tannin backbone and freshness on the finish.

Vinosia is a new project started by Luciano Ercolino in 2004. Today, the winery is already delivering a range of highly praised wines. As one of the co-founders of Feudi di San Gregorio, Luciano wasn't exactly a stranger to Campania, and now, he is a staple of Southern Italian wine production. Located in Irpinia, a district of the Apennine Mountains around Avellino, the winery allows the producers to harness a vast array of hilly, volcanic terroirs and unique microclimates. Indeed, the wines showcase the local aglianico grape in a kaleidoscope of styles, from the exotic and mouthwatering to the more reserved and edgy.

With 180 winegrowers caring and cultivating 300 hectares of vineyard in Piedmont, Vite Colte is an admirable 21st century project. It is no wonder that the president of Vite Colte Piero Quadrumolo is able to produce more than five million bottles a year. Founded in 1980, Vite Colte covers the gamut as far as varietals – everything from arneis and erbaluce to sauvignon blanc and nebbiolo. Aside from modern enological systems, Vite Colte also has a world-class technical group led by Daniele Eberle in the vineyards, alongside with Bruno Cordero in our winery.

Founded in 1964, Viticcio is located among the rolling hills of Greve in Chianti. Alessandro Landini at Viticcio was one of the new-generation winemakers who first started using modern viticulture and winemaking methods in the 1970s. Today, Viticcio encompasses 120 hectares of land in Chianti Classico and Maremma, and consistently makes outstanding wines. In fact, it is difficult to say if Viticcio's Chianti Classico Riservas are better than the two well-regarded Super Tuscans Monile and Prunaio. Nevertheless, all of the wines here age beautifully. Landini also makes excellent wines in the appellation of Bolgheri at I Greppi, but Chianti Classico is still the closest to his heart.

WHY OUR OCEANS – AND MEXICO'S VAQUITA – ARE WORTH PROTECTING

Wine is more than just wine. It's a product of the earth, a benefactor (or sometimes victim) of Mother Nature and her temperament – not to mention man's interventions. Oceans and their water are one such critical lifeline to the vine. That's why JamesSuckling. com promotes, supports and contributes to Sea Shepherd, the eco-conservation group focused on protecting the ocean, particularly whales and other sea mammals.

We currently give to a special project in the Sea of Cortez in Mexico to save the Vaquita, the smallest porpoise in the world whose numbers have diminished to only 40 or so. They are most endangered sea mammal on the planet. These small, beautiful creatures, often called the panda of the sea, are unique to these waters, and despite the Mexican government establishing a sea refuge for them, poachers continue to kill these animals in illegal fisherman's nets.

Sea Shepherd surveys the waters, collects illegal gill nets, and reports poaching activities. Just after Christmas, they helped capture eight illicit fishermen and confiscated boats, nets and other equipment in conjunction with the Mexican Navy. I'm proud to be part of this venture (called Operation Milagro III) and last year James-Suckling.com donated enough money to keep Sea Shepherd up and running in the Sea of Cortez for more than a month. We plan to contribute more this year.

The conservation of the Vaquita is important to me—and not just because of my love for wine. I remember as a young boy traveling each year to the Sea of Cortez with my late grandfather. We would drive down from Los Angeles during Spring break and camp for a few weeks to fish with locals. Many times, I spotted these friendly Vaquita swimming a short distance from the shore. It's hard to believe that they're almost extinct. I hope we can help them and that you will consider joining me.
